with Dr. Karen Perry

Friday, March 29, 2019
Noon -1:15pm – Lunch & seminar
A-213 Veterinary Medical Complex

For all CVM Faculty, Staff and Graduate Students

Clinical reasoning represents the formulae that a clinician applies in order to reconstrue a complex clinical problem as a technical one and reach a clinical diagnosis. This represents a high order skill which can be very challenging to teach. We will start the conversation by describing our clinical teaching obligations as relate to accreditation, then Dr. Perry will discuss what we mean by clinical reasoning and present her experience with teaching the “logical” approach. Join us for a conversation on this topic, which will be a good Q/A opportunity for everyone who participates in clinical teaching.

Please join us and bring your questions and experiences to the conversation.

Lunch will be provided.
