11:45am -1pm – Lunch & seminar
A-214 Veterinary Medical Complex

For all CVM Faculty, Staff and Graduate Students

As Sir William Osler said “Medicine is learned by the bedside and not in the classroom”. Patient-side teaching forms an important part of veterinary clinical teaching and for many clinicians, represents a significant proportion of student contact time. As veterinary educators, this may represent our most significant contribution to student teaching, and yet it is one of the most complex learning environments for students and teachers alike. In this session we will explore some of the advantages of patient-side teaching, examine the challenges, and identify some strategies for optimizing teaching in this context.

Please join us and bring your questions and experiences to the conversation.

Lunch will be provided.
